Seniors graduating in May will be the last class of University of Toledo students to graduate from the College of Arts and Sciences.

The beginning of the spring 2011 semester marks the beginning of the transition period for UT's restructuring plan, which is now in full effect.

The CAS split into three area-specific colleges under the restructuring plan.

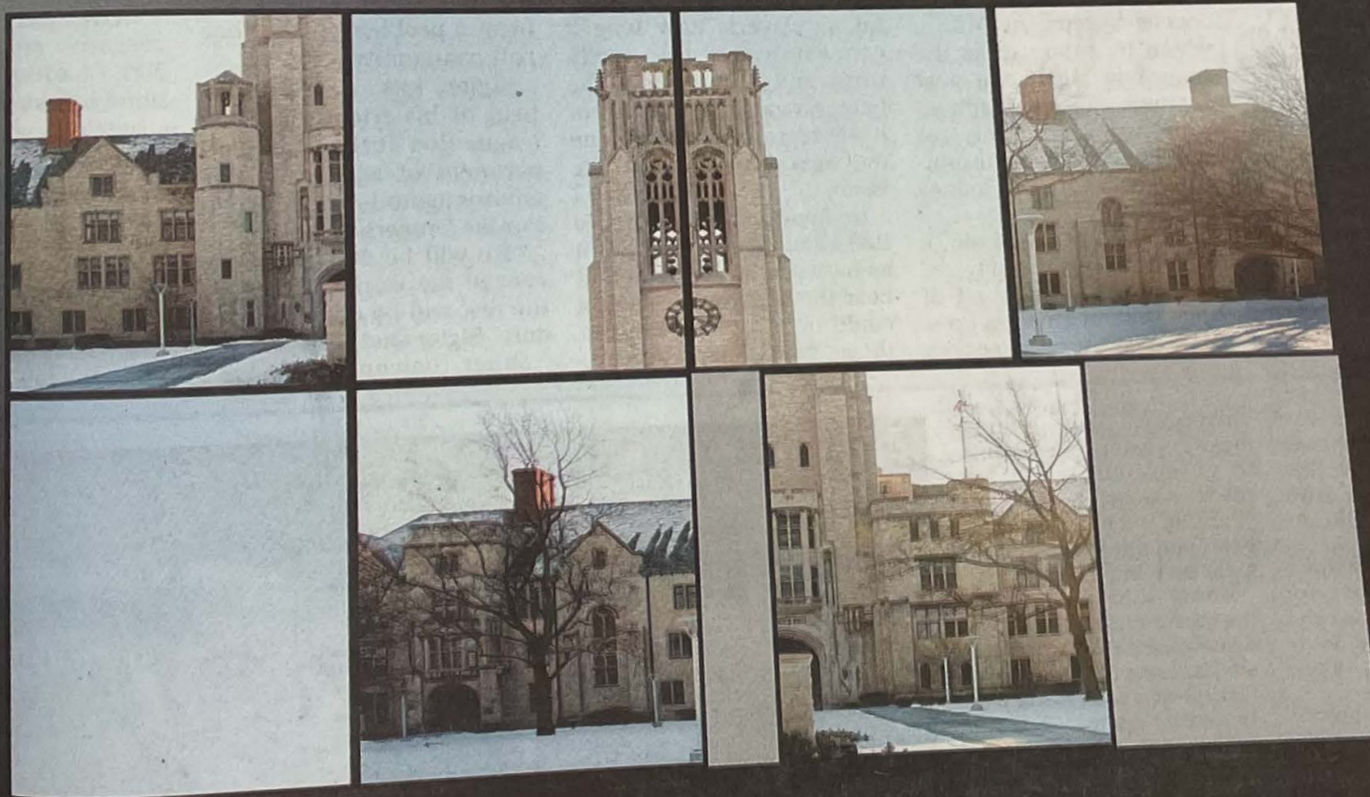

"Seniors graduating will be graduating from the College of Arts and Sciences because that's where they matriculated from four or five years ago," said Bill McMillen, Interim Main Campus Provost, Vice President for Governmental Relations and Chief of Staff in the Office of the President. "We tried to create as much continuity as possible."

Recruiters will no longer recruit new students for the College of Arts and Sciences but will begin advertising for the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, the College of Visual and Performing Arts and the College of Language, Literature and Social Science.

Student Government President Matt Rubin said he does not think students graduating from colleges different than what they initially expected will have much effect on their chance for employment after graduation.

"You're still going to graduate with a
